Center on Teaching and Learning
College of Education, University of Oregon

Project Description

The Undergraduate Research Fellowship (URF) Program was established in 1998 for a singular purpose: To support University of Oregon undergraduate students who are committed to research and the process of inquiry and are likely to pursue graduate studies with a commitment to conducting a sustained program of research.

The Undergraduate Research Fellowship Program supports Oregon residents who are full-time juniors and seniors in any major area of study to work as Research Fellows in any discipline (e.g., Chemistry, Education, English, Geography, Psychology) at the University of Oregon. Three fellowship positions are available for the 2009-2010 school year. Admission to the program is highly competitive. Students appointed to this fellowship are responsible for finding their own research experience, which must meet the approval of the URF Director. All URFs are granted a tuition waiver for the entire academic year (maximum of 17 credits per term) and are expected to participate in their research project approximately 10 hours per week. URFs will also be required to enroll in a research seminar for 1 credit hour each term during the 2009-2010 academic year. Admission to the program is based on the quality of a student's application, personal statement (general focus, integration of activities, detailed planning), academic record, and faculty recommendations.

The Undergraduate Research Fellowship (URF) Program is sponsored by the Center on Teaching and Learning (CTL), in the College of Education at the UO. For additional information on the URF program, visit our website (<http://idea.uoregon.edu/urf/urf.html>).
